Helping homeowners create an inventory of personal belongings

PERSONAL INVENTORY

From the time we're small, each of us collects things. At first, it's seashells or marbles, simple things that represent our discovery of the world around us. As the years pass, we find new things to treasure. Books. Photographs. Paintings. Furniture. Family heirlooms.

Whether large or small, expensive or merely dear to us, the possessions we acquire over time say a great deal about us.

Today, you own a home filled with possessions of many kinds. Some are functional. Others are decorative, serving to enhance your surroundings. Each of these possessions tells something about your personal style and is worth protecting.

Wisely, you want to protect the things that mean so much to you, so you carry homeowners insurance. But to be certain your valued possessions are fully covered against fire, theft and other perils, you should take extra steps.

Many prudent homeowners install security devices, such as deadbolt locks, fire extinguishers, smoke alarms and perhaps even fire and burglary alarm systems connected to the fire or police station.

These precautionary measures will greatly reduce the chance and severity of a loss occurring. However, there is no guarantee a loss will not occur.

So, it's important to go beyond that. Another step toward protecting your personal property – one that is often overlooked – is to create an inventory of the things in your home. We believe that you should complement your home insurance plan with an inventory of all of your personal possessions. We are providing you with this booklet to help you take such an inventory, easily and thoroughly.

This booklet gives you simple instructions, along with room-by-room listings, to help you make a detailed record of your home furnishings, personal possessions and valuable items.

Once completed, you should review this inventory with your agent to determine whether or not your home insurance program provides adequate protection for the things you value most. If needed, supplemental insurance coverages may be recommended to protect property such as jewelry, collections, antiques, china, crystal – even personal computers!

This inventory will also be useful to you in the event of a loss. Having this information on hand will make it easier for you to file a complete and prompt claim, supported by accurate documentation. This, in turn, helps determine the replacement cost* of your lost or damaged possessions so we can settle your claim quickly.

How to begin

This booklet is organized on a room-by-room basis, making it easy for you to systematically record the items in each area of your home. Simply walk through each room and write down the items that you see. Take your time. Be sure to list all items of value, along with their year of purchase, original price and current estimated value. If you don't have all the relevant information at the time of your "walk-through," leave blanks and fill them in after checking your purchase records.

As you're completing your inventory, jot down serial numbers of items such as cameras, computers and home electronics. Items without serial numbers should be permanently marked with a unique identifier that will allow you to positively identify the item as belonging to you. Having such numbers available helps the police return recovered property to the rightful owner and is evidence to help prove that the property was stolen. Do not use Social Security numbers or any other information that could be useful to an identity thief.

Do you own a number of valuable items, such as antique jewelry or original works of art? If so, it's wise to have these items appraised to establish their market value. Your agent can work with you to determine the right kind of coverage for these special items. This way, in the event of a covered loss, you can be confident that you will receive an insurance settlement that is appropriate to the value of the items.

Create a photographic record of your belongings

Photographs are an important supplement to your written inventory, because they give details that written descriptions cannot. In addition, photographs document the quality, appearance and size of the things you own.

- Use any camera you're comfortable with, digital or film, but be certain to use color. Color prints will best show the true characteristics and quality of your possessions. If you have a camcorder, you can create an especially valuable photographic record of your home and possessions. A video of each room in your home, as well as hallways, porches, gardens and shrubbery, will help establish the general appearance and quality of your home, in addition to documenting your personal possessions.
- Photograph systematically. Start with one wall in the living room, taking as many photographs as necessary to record the entire room's contents. Then do the same with all the other rooms in your home.
- Don't forget to open closets. Even though photographs can't document the quality of your wardrobe, they do record its quantity.

- Your basement, garage and attic may not hold valuable items, but they do hold items you would need to replace in the event of a major loss. Check each of these locations for items that should be photographed, such as power tools, lawn furniture, laundry appliances, etc.
- Valuable small items such as silverware, furs, china or crystal, as well as larger items such as sculpture, paintings or collections must be recorded with extra care. Lay small items out on a plain cloth or rug next to a ruler to establish actual size. Try to photograph at close range in order to include as many visual details as possible. Turn over a single piece of china or silver to show the hallmark, manufacturer and pattern name.
- Whether you get prints of your photos, or store them on a CD, be sure to label each with the name of the item(s) and its location in your house (as recorded in your written inventory).
